What you need to know about Colleges and Sixth Forms in the UK:

Colleges and Sixth Forms

College vs Sixth Form Sixth forms will feel a lot like school whereas colleges offer a more independent environment and you will need to take more responsibility for your learning. Sixth form colleges are something in between. Go to open days to help you work out what suits you best.

Qualifications Sixth forms tend to offer A Levels and BTECs. Colleges offer these qualifications and many more including technical qualifications, NVQs and diplomas. The flexibility and range of options available at colleges can be a big plus.

Level up Know the level of the qualifications you are doing. GCSEs are level 2; A Levels are level 3; BTECs are mostly Level 2 or 3. Other qualifications at colleges vary from levels 1 - 8 so check carefully. Level 4 and above is higher education; undergraduate degrees are level 6.

Adding Value A school's 'value add' score tells you how much on average the students improve during their time there. It takes into account the start point of the students as well as considering their final grades. A positive value add score shows the school has added value for the students.

Applications You can normally apply to as many colleges and sixth form as you like. Unless you are staying at your school's own sixth form you will often need to write a personal statement for each college outlining why you want to study your chosen courses. You may have to do an interview as well.

Assessment Method
The City and Guilds Level 2 Certificate covers 4 units of practical, theory and design work. Learners will be working on their given project brief guided by the tutor and peers; a valuable resource during your study. There will also be group discussions at the end of each session during which the group will evaluate their progress and tasks of that day. There will be tutor presentations and practical demonstrations outlining the techniques you will cover. All work will be assessed according to the City and Guilds guidelines. Assessment will take place on a continual basis throughout the course using observation, discussion, feedback, practical work, tasks and tutorial reviews. Formal assessment will take place mid-term and again at the end of the term where you will construct, present and stage your arrangements. You will receive written and verbal feedback together with your grade for your portfolio and assessment pieces.
